GREENWOOD CITY

Mrs. Colista Morgan, Corres. — Far back where deer pause at the time that sunset smiles and they move as softly as a dream; is the forest section which I visited today.

There seemed to be a crust when I set out and I hoped to go to the cliffs across the road. I found that the crust within the forest would not hold me so I kept down pond. Just beyond the falls I took my swamp path. To my right every jagged, snow-covered rock was alabaster white in the sunshine. It was a fitting trail; hypnotic and deeply stirring among these lichen-spattered stones at the base of the hills. It was so warm and pleasant here in the boggy meadow that I could almost fancy that from beneath, there would come a joyful chorus: "For lo, the winter is past!"

but we chilly mortals still find the wind frosty and the woods unpromising and we refuse to take up the glad refrain at this time.

Beyond the swamp I turned right and took the snow trail toward the top of Patch Mountain. Ahead out of the distance the parallel ridges dragged across the landscape with the furrows of the valleys between.

I was truly alone here walking among the grays and greens of the trees, as I climbed into the foothills. Where ever the trail led I followed looking at the sculptured beauty of the trees which formed the most impressive feature of the landscape.

Once a score of white birches huddled together near the trail; one of which formed a perfect arch above.

Standing there alone, I was surrounded by a silence so intense I could hear no other sound than my own slow breathing. My eyes wandered over the wild and lonely beauty.

The air was clear and bracing but I loosened my coat and removed my mittens as I climbed up then tobogganed down into the trough beyond.

At my right part of the way was a gully through which ran a clear gurgling brook, which appeals to every country-loving heart. This is the same brook which feeds my falls.

The sunlight filtered through the leafless branches; a helicopter puttered up the valley.

A "cat" had followed this same trail ahead of me; perhaps in the night.

After some distance I turned a curve and there stood an old camp of some lumberman in days long gone. Its walls stood but its roof was gone.

An old road led to the right of it. I continued on by and crossed the brook on the old bridge. I remembered fishing here several years ago.

The cool, dim shadows brought on interlude so calm I wished that I might stay. I wondered how long the bridge had stood there patiently stretching across this wayward stream; what tales it could tell.

I moved on and up again, then glanced at my watch. One hour had passed since I left home. So now I must return to get lunch.

Going back I had company. My shadow kept by my side all the way. Of course I was reminded of Stevenson's "I have a little shadow."

The sparkling trail glistened and again the silence was intriguing on this glorious morning.

Before long I was between the ponds but instead of going through the swamp I kept down across Turtle Bridge and then on to the main highway.

Here I met the ageless winds just coming down the valley through dark channels from the north.

In just under two hours I reached home to finish the tasks I should have done earlier before I discovered there was a crust.

"O winter world, O soft white world,

In you I see God's touch, And feel that he created you For those he loves so much."

S. A. D. 44 DIRECTORS MEET

not itemized verbatim as presented but were alluded to. Atty. Loring stated that she felt they had not received adequate reasons for dismissal.

In other business before the board, there was a presentation of a survey of SRA test results by Edward Flynn, principal of Bethel elementary schools. He recommended the district do away with the tests and use teacher-made exams. SRA testing was eliminated from the district budget previously. Mr. Flynn's report was referred to the Education Development Committee.

A petition was presented from 37 members of the Telstar staff asking that arrangements be made to transfer the district computer payroll to another bank. The directors agreed to investigate the possibility.

The board directed the chairman to contact the commission of the Maine Department of Labor and Industry and an attorney relative to the decision of the M. S. A. D. 441 Education Association to seek fact-finding unilaterally in their negotiations with the board.

The board approved a motion to allow current members of the negotiating committee to serve in the open chair or as consultants if they wish until resolution of current bargaining with the Education Association.

Board members, absent Monday evening were Kenneth Finner of Andover and Paul Wright of Newry.

Due to the fact that March 6 is town meeting day in four of the five member towns of the District, the next regular session of the board will be held at Telstar Regional High School on Tuesday, March 7, at 7:30.
